DAY PROFITABLE TO FORM PLAYERS

With One Exception, All Races at Jamestown Are Won by Favorites.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.) Norfolk, Va., April 19.—With one exception all races at Jamestown were won by favorites to-day. Church Bell, at 7 to 1, galloped in ahead of her field in the initial dash for two-year-olds.
The other winners were all short-price horses, and the form players as a result had a good day.

Fond Heart, an almost prohibitive favorite in the fifth race, won easily, making his second consecutive victory this week. The mile and a sixteenth race was won by Silver Knight, with O. U. Buster a close second.

Results of Races.

BY GUS MALBERT.
Petersburg, Va., April 19.—J. W.
Seward, president of the Cockade City Baseball Corporation, sat in the left end of the grandstand, H. B.
Pritchard, secretary of the organization, sat in the right corner. In between were many directors and well-wishers of the club with which Henry B. Busch hopes to capture another pennant. It was opening day in Gooseville, and 6,000 or more fans gathered to see a repetition of what happened in Richmond Thursday. The sun shone brightly. Not a cloud marred the blue. Defeat was impossible, and then Charlie Strain, late sawduster, now a full fledged professional, started to pitch. Just to follow the usual procedure the score is now set down. It was 6 to 0, and Petersburg gathered what the doughnut surrounds.

Aside from everything, the festivities, the gala parade, the half-holiday, which a patriotic and a ball loving public had declared, the pretty frocks of the far prettier young women who dwell on the Appomattox, the enthusiasm of everybody, from the diminutive son and heir of Heinle, known as H. B. Busch, the second, aside even from the natty uniforms of the home club, the flinging of Charlie Strain stands out as the one bright spot of the day. Two hits are registered against him. One deserves to be placed in the hit column, the other, an H. B. Busch, the second,
other, an H. B. Busch, the second, and on which he gathered a pair of shoes, some patriotic citizen offering a pair of klicks to every member of the home club hitting safely, should have been an easy out, but that Burke is still getting himself right, Jack was to be minus his new pen-adornment. Eleven of the tribe of Busch waved frantically and struck out.

It was really a remarkable performance, and the youngster deserves every word of praise which can possibly be heaped upon him. Not even the royal hospitality which the Petersburg people bestowed on the visiting batters from the James can dim the glory of Charlie Strain's first performance in a championship battle against professionals. The more one looks at his performance in retrospect, the more remarkable it appears. True, Parry Thackera comes in for a large share of the praise. Never for a moment did the backstop forget that the boy on the mound was a boy. Consistently he kept at him and told him what to do and how to do it. No one, certainly not this scribe, would take one thing away from the sturdy backstop. But Strain had the goods, and he delivered them.
All of the shouting and all of the noise never distracted him one moment from the business in hand.

He kept at his task every minute of the nine long innings. Using a fast ball, with the corners as his particular aim, he had the veterans guessing from the beginning. In the very opening frame he pitched just ten balls over the rubber. Nine of them were good, and the first three men were strike-out victims. He pitched exactly eighteen before he went wrong.
During the entire game he walked but one man, and Howdell was the fortunate one. Howdell also happened to be the only fellow who got as far as the midway station. In the sixth, after he had walked, Parry let a last one get away for a short passed ball, and Howdell got to second. He stayed there.

Never throughout the game was the youngster worried or flurried. He stuck to his post like a major, never distracted, always using his head, and holding his position just as if he had been stacking up against pennant winners for years.

While doing out all of the praise—and how good it feels to be praising instead of panning—let's say something nice for every one of the seven men outside of the battery. Steve Griffin was a whole team in himself. He and Jack Flournoy made a pair on the coaching lines hard to beat, and are largely responsible for the runs counting which won the game. Not a miscue happened, while Johnny Graft garnered in a couple of master strokes.
Inside third base, and hurried them across the lot on a hurry call with an ease and grace which will spell victory in many contests yet to come. It was a great day—but not for Petersburg.

So far as the victory is concerned, the Colts won it. While five of the six runs may be accounted for by the unpardonable wildness of a trio of Busch fingers, still the run which won the game came as a result of two clouts to outer works, one by Mattie and the other, for three sacks, by Burke.
It happened in the ninth, it is true, but it happened nevertheless.

A more generous bunch of pitchers has never been witnessed than Heinle's selected for his opening. McGinnity, one of the lads let out by Joe McGin-nity, managed to pass five during the less than two innings he lasted.
Thompson was absolutely no improvement on his predecessor, letting two clouts ahead without tapping the leather. Kenigs was even worse, having more being charged to him.

Something absolutely unique in baseball happened in the fifth inning.
Without making a single hit, the Colts counted four times, each an all round the list, and Burke was up twice in that inning. His first time up he walked. So did McComas, about whom a little more later. Thackera likewise got a free trip, jaggling the sacks.
Strain was safe when a try was made to get Burke out, but the plate, and one count. Griffin sacrificed to left, scoring McComas. Score two, Graft walked, again filling the sacks. Thackera counted when Flournoy took a grade ride. Count three. Graft was also counted across the rubber, making the fourth and last count of the session.
It wasn't exactly pretty, but exceedingly satisfactory to the Richmond contingent. The other two runs came later, one in the ninth, already told about, and the other in the seventh, when Graft counted the second time on his walk and Mattie's double.

Willie Baker, the fast little infielder of the Colts, is lost to the club for good and all. Yesterday, before the game, he was hit by a line drive from Bradley's office, signed his contract and buried Willie Baker forever. In his place comes Willie McComas. The Baltimore lad, to tell the story in a nutshell, has tired of his home baseball and has decided to play for the Colts. He is a real find, and he really under the patronymic which the folks at home gave him. His name is really and truly Willie McComas, and as that he will hereafter answer to the fans.

Before the game an automobile parade went through the streets. Long before the hour of starting the park was filled with an anxious, eager and happy bunch of fans. Later—but the score tells that. Here it is:
